Weather

- — Fog patches and low cloud are beginning to redevelop across a broad area extending from England to C-Europe, via N-France, Benelux and Germany. Conditions will gradually deteriorate across these regions during the evening and overnight, persisting until tomorrow morning. Storm Bruna, a broad low-pressure area centred over the Atlantic, is bringing showers, rain and a few thunderstorms, particularly W and S of Iberia. Conditions will deteriorate further over Portugal this evening and overnight, with strong winds, heavy rain and ISOL/EMBD CB (Tops FL370) affecting the area. Bands of rain are also affecting France and C-Europe, moving northwards and reaching SW-UK and Ireland by tomorrow morning. Meanwhile, the development of Storm Charles over the Atlantic will bring unsettled and windy conditions to Madeira from tomorrow morning. Over the Canary Islands, winds will veer to southerly from midday.
